Tell me once again that there is no such thing as white privilege.

Judge 'lets off' cocaine dealing private schoolgirl to protect her career

A FORMER private schoolgirl who helped her brother supply cocaine to students was spared jail after arguing it would blight her future career.

Poppy Murray, 22, acted as go-between for her 19-year-old sibling Joel and did not see 'anything morally wrong' with providing the drug to pupils, a court heard.

But, instead of her lawyer, being behind bars would jeopardise her prospects and she now suburban family home in Middleton, Manchester, in 2014 following a tip-off.

Amphetamines were found stuffed in a freezer and Joel Murray's mobile phone showed evidence of a £100 cocaine deal.

He had sent a group text message to 16 friends saying that he had a high-purity haul of the drug and offering to sell it. He said: 'Yo it's Joel - some killer raw there yo.'

In another exchange, using slang for the drug, Joel Murray

Her brother's Facebook page shows him on a snowboarding holiday and drinking cocktails in an exclusive restaurant.

He also pleaded guilty to possession of drugs and a money was pooled and the drugs were shared. A prison sentence would be a punishment but it would do nothing but blight a very bright career. She is a very clever, ambitious and driven young lady.
